Though targets are provided in each call, traders are requested to start booking profits when their profit is equal to the amount of stop loss and trail stop loss to cost or any other good support levels to lock in gains and to minimise risk in the open trades.

How to use the above table

- The intraday PIVOT is given in the center of the table.
- If price moves down first, the two levels to the right of pivot are the support zones. One should buy dips down into those two levels with the stop loss placed below the third support as shown.
- The pivot and two levels to the left of the pivot are the target prices. The pivot is the immediate target during a rise while a rise to the second two price targets given should be used to take profits on positions.
- If price moves up first, the two levels to the left of pivot are the resistance zones. One should sell on rallies into those two levels with the stop loss placed above the third resistance as shown.
- The pivot and two levels to the right of the pivot are the target prices. The pivot is the immediate target during a fall while a fall to the second two price targets given should be used to take profits on positions.
- Sometimes, prices will quickly break the stoploss levels or the take profit levels. In such cases, it should be concluded that some bigger and more forceful trend is in progress and one should avoid trading against the trend at such times.
- All levels given above are indicative and readers should use their judgment while taking trades.
